DOCUMENT-BASED QUESTION

This question is based on the accompanying documents (1–7). The question is designed to test your ability to work with historical documents. Some of the documents have been edited for the purposes of the question. As you analyze the documents, take into account the source of each document and any point of view that may be presented in the document.

Historical Context:

Women have not had the same social, economic, and political rights as men. The struggle for women’s rights is an important part of United States history. Individuals, groups, and historical events have helped women in their struggle for equality.

Task:

Using information from the documents and your knowledge of social studies, answer the questions that follow each document in Part A. Your answers to the questions will help you write the Part B essay in which you will be asked to

- Discuss two ways in which women historically have not had the same rights as men
- Identify and discuss two individuals, groups, and/or events that have helped women in their struggle for equal rights

Short-Answer Questions

Directions: Analyze the documents and answer the short-answer questions that follow each document in the space provided.

Document 1

. . . We have been obliged to preach woman’s rights, because many, instead of listening to what we had to say on temperance, have questioned the right of a woman to speak on any subject. In all courts of justice and legislative assemblies, if the right of the speaker to be there be questioned, all business waits until that point be settled. Now, it is not settled in the mass of minds that woman has any rights on this footstool, and much less a right to stand on an even pedestal with man, look him in the face as an equal, and rebuke the sins of her day and generation. Let it be clearly understood, then, that we are a woman’s rights Society; that we believe it woman’s duty to speak whenever she feels the impression [urge] to do so; that it is her right to be present in all the councils of Church and State. The fact that our agents are women, settles the question of our character on this point. . . .

4 What does this poster show about the role of women in the workforce during World War II? [1]
. . . If women expected their votes to bring swift changes in their lives, they had few reasons to cheer. They benefited from employment opportunities caused by the impact of World War II, but most of those opportunities evaporated in the postwar years. After the war women were expected to step aside for returning veterans who wished to reclaim jobs; as a result, most women assumed roles that were just as restricted as before the war.

Two events in 1963 demonstrated women's plight and frustrations. First, a report on sex discrimination by the Presidential Commission on Women, appointed by President Kennedy in 1961, documented inequities [unequal treatment] women experienced in the workplace, and showed them to be similar to those suffered by minority groups. The Commission's findings revealed, among other things, that only 7 percent of the nation's doctors and fewer than 4 percent of its lawyers were women. While acknowledging the larger role married women played in the economy, the Commission nonetheless asserted that a woman's primary role was as mother and wife, and it recommended special training of young women for marriage and motherhood. It also expressed opposition to an equal rights amendment, maintaining that the Fourteenth Amendment sufficiently protected women's equality of opportunity. This Amendment provides that States may not “deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. . . .”
