Short-Answer Questions

Directions: Read each document and answer the question or questions that follow each document in the space provided.

Document 1

The native people of North America have always depended upon the natural world for their survival. Watching the changes going on in the natural world with each season, they also look up into the sky and see it changing. In many parts of North America, the native people relate the cycles of the moon (called Grandmother Moon by many Native Americans) to those seasons. In every year, there are thirteen of those eight days from one new moon to the next.

Many Native American people look at the turtle’s back as a sort of calendar, with its pattern of thirteen large scales standing for the thirteen moons in each year, and twenty-eight smaller scales standing for the twenty-eight days between each new moon. It reminds them that all things are connected and that they must try to live in balance.

1 Tell how Native Americans have used the turtle to explain changes in their natural world. [2]

Document 5

The Peach Pit Game

A favorite game played at the Green Corn Festival is the Peach Pit Game. The rules of the game are simple. Six peach pits are painted with a color on one side. The pits are placed in a wooden bowl. The player raps the bowl sharply on the ground, and the pits bounce. Points are scored on how many pits turn up the same color.

The game may go on for days before there is a winner. People place bets on who the winner will be. Clans often compete with each other.

This game reminds the people that material wealth is not important. Players bet with a favorite possession, such as a ribbon shirt or a turtle rattle. If this is lost to the other player, the belief is that the item will be waiting for the person in the “next world.”

5 Based on this picture and the reading passage, name two different objects from nature that the Iroquois have used in making and playing the Peach Pit Game. [2]
